SECTION 1

Who Is the Thief?

Four cases · owner, loss, law

Most people can picture a thief: someone who takes what belongs to another, without permission. The thief is usually the easiest person in the story to identify. The label seems to follow from the act. This section tests that idea through four cases.

Each case is checked against three conditions: an owner, a loss, and a law that names the taking as a crime. In an ordinary theft, all three are present, and so is the thief. Each case that follows keeps the taking in plain sight and changes something else.

Two women take the same goods from the same counter, but only one is called a thief. An outlaw robs travellers at knifepoint, and centuries of retelling turn him into a hero. A palace is looted, and its treasures pass through so many lawful hands that no single person seems to have taken them.

The taking stays visible throughout. What changes is who the taker is, who the victim is, where the goods end up, and how much time has passed. The label 'thief' turns out to depend on more than the act.

Audio guide · Section 1
Scan to listen

1 SECTION 1 · CASE 1 — ORDINARY THEFT

A wallet, taken on a crowded street · Present day

On a crowded street, a hand slips into a pocket and leaves with a wallet. The owner notices only later. A complaint is filed, and if the pickpocket is caught, the law takes its course. Cash, cards and jewellery are taken the same way.

In India, that law is Section 303 of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023. It defines theft as dishonestly taking someone's movable property out of their possession, without consent. The pickpocket's act fits every part of that definition.

Owner, loss, law: all three are present, and the thief is obvious. Note the word movable. Under this section, land cannot be stolen at all — a limit Section 3 of this exhibition returns to.

OWNER ✓ · LOSS ✓ · LAW ✓ → Thief: obvious

SECTION 1 · CASE 2 — KLEPTOMANIA AND CLASS

Two shoplifters, one counter, two verdicts · Department stores in the United States and Britain, 1870s–1900s

From the 1870s, large department stores spread through American and British cities. Goods sat on open counters, and shoppers could handle them freely. Shoplifting rose with them. Many of those caught were middle-class women, the stores' best customers, taking things they could easily afford. Doctors offered an explanation. Since the early nineteenth century, they had described 'kleptomania', an urge to steal. Applied to these women, it turned a crime into an illness. Stores, unwilling to lose respectable customers, often settled such cases quietly.

The diagnosis did not reach everyone. In New York in 1882, Ellen Sardy was caught in a Sixth Avenue department store with three pairs of hosiery and five pieces of silk. Her lawyer admitted the theft and asked for clemency because she had been 'of weak mind'. The court accepted it and she went free. Historian Elaine Abelson, who recovered the case, writes that only middle-class women seemed to suffer from kleptomania: 'stealing by members of other classes was simple theft'.

Owner and loss are identical in both cases, and so is the law. Only the person differs. The act did not decide the label; class did.

OWNER ✓ · LOSS ✓ · LAW ✓ → Thief: depends on who you are

SECTION 1 · CASE 3 — Robbing the Rich

Robin Hood and six centuries of retelling · England, 1370s to today

Robin Hood is first mentioned in the 1370s, when the poem Piers Plowman refers to 'rhymes of Robin Hood'. The poem says nothing about who he was or what he did; it tells us only that such rhymes already circulated.

The earliest surviving ballads, from about 1450, describe an outlaw living in the forest with a band of followers, in conflict with a corrupt sheriff. He stops wealthy travellers on the road and takes what they carry at the point of a weapon. The ballads are frank about the violence, and they are also frank about what they do not say: they do not describe him giving to the poor. That line is first set down plainly by John Stow in 1592, roughly a century after A Gest of Robyn Hode, and it is the version that has lasted.

Owner, loss and law are all present. The travellers owned what they carried, they lost it, and Robin lived outside the law's protection as a declared outlaw. Nothing is missing. What changed was not the robbery but the story told about it afterwards — and each retelling gave the robberies a better reason.

OWNER ✓ · LOSS ✓ · LAW ✓ → Thief, retold as hero

SECTION 1 · CASE 4 — The Benin Bronzes

Who exactly is the thief? · Benin City (now in Nigeria), 1897 to today

In 1897, a British punitive expedition captured Benin City, burned the royal palace and removed thousands of brass plaques, ivories and commemorative heads. Many were auctioned in London to defray the cost of the expedition itself. Others entered Western museums over the following decades through purchase, donation and transfer. These were not currency or raw material: the plaques were the palace's own record of its dynasty, an archive kept in place.

Owner and loss are not in doubt. What is missing is the third condition. Each transfer was lawful where it took place, and every person in the chain can point to someone earlier. With no act the law named as a crime, the chain has no obvious thief — only a sequence of people who each acted correctly, and a benefit that passed down the line with the objects.

The question has since moved from who took the objects to who holds them now. In 2022 the Smithsonian transferred ownership of 29 objects to Nigeria's National Commission for Museums and Monuments. In 2023 Nigeria's outgoing president declared the Oba of Benin the owner of returned bronzes, and who should hold, keep and display them within Nigeria remains disputed. Returning an object settles ownership. It does not settle who is answerable for how it left.

OWNER ✓ · LOSS ✓ · LAW ✗ → Thief: no one?

THE GAZETTE OF INDIA : EXTRAORDINARY · NO. 53 · 25 DEC 2023 · PAGE 1

GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT · CLIPPED FROM THE OFFICIAL GAZETTE, PAGE 78

CHAPTER XVII
OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY
Of theft

Theft. 303. (1) Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft.

Explanation 1.—A thing so long as it is attached to the earth, not being movable property, is not the subject of theft; but it becomes capable of being the subject of theft as soon as it is severed from the earth.

Explanation 2.—A moving effected by the same act which affects the severance may be a theft.

Section 303, Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023
2023 · The Gazette of India, Extraordinary, Part II — Section 1 · Clipped from the official Gazette
India's criminal code defines theft as dishonestly taking movable property from someone's possession without consent. Explanation 1 spells out the limit: a thing attached to the earth 'is not the subject of theft'. Under this section, land cannot be stolen.

SAME GOODS · TWO VERDICTS — COMPARISON

NEW YORK · JANUARY 1882
Ellen Sardy
Caught in Simpson, Crawford & Simpson's Sixth Avenue store with three pairs of stockings and five pieces of silk. Her lawyer admitted the theft and pleaded that she had been 'of weak mind'.

KLEPTOMANIA
She went free.

LONDON · MAY 1893
Hannah Wilson & Ann Hanstead
Caught at a City silk warehouse with eighty-six yards of silk rolled under a skirt. Wilson told the court she was 'a respectable woman, of Hackney'. No doctor spoke for them; both had a previous conviction.

THEFT
Guilty. Three years' penal servitude.

A Paris newspaper of the period suggested defining a thief as 'a kind of kleptomaniac, but of the lower social class' — and a kleptomaniac as 'a kind of thief, but of the better class'.

Two verdicts (comparison) · Made for this exhibition · based on Elaine S. Abelson, 'The Invention of Kleptomania', Signs 15:1 (1989), citing the New York Times, 18 Jan 1882; and the Proceedings of the Old Bailey, trial t18931030-454

Each retelling gave him a better reason — TIMELINE

1370s — Piers Plowman — MENTIONED — 'Rhymes of Robin Hood' exist. Nothing more.

c.1450 — Robin Hood and the Monk — VIOLENT OUTLAW — His men kill a monk and his page.

c.1500 — A Gest of Robyn Hode — HELPS A POOR KNIGHT — Lends money. No 'rich to poor'.

1592 — John Stow, Annales — ROBS THE RICH, SPARES THE POOR — The line that lasts.

1922 · 1938 — Fairbanks, Flynn — WRONGED NOBLEMAN — Fights injustice on screen.

The chain of hands — DIAGRAM

1 Soldier — Carried a plaque out of the palace, following orders.
2 Officer — Led an expedition authorised in London.
3 Auction, London — Sold objects to pay for the expedition.
4 Dealer — Bought at auction. Lawful.
5 Museum — Bought from the dealer. Lawful.
6 Curator, 1950 — Catalogued it. Took nothing.

Each was lawful where it took place. Each can point to someone earlier.

2022 · Smithsonian transfers ownership of 29 objects to Nigeria's NCMM
2023 · Oba of Benin declared owner; who holds them is disputed

The chain of hands (diagram) · Made for this exhibition

INCIDENT REPORT · FIRST INFORMATION REPORT, PAGE 1

N.C.R.B. ITEM (सी.आर.बी.)
I.I.F.-I (प्रथिसू अ॰ वि॰गलती - I)
FIRST INFORMATION REPORT
(Under Section 173 B.N.S.S.)
प्रथम खबर प्रतिवेदन
(फौ॰ प्र॰ सं॰ का॰ सं॰ प्रतिवेदन समय 173 भा॰ना॰सु॰सं॰)

1. District (जिला): Nagpur Year (वर्ष): 2026
FIR No. (प्रथम खबर क्र.): 0038 P.S. (पुलिस थाना): Gondia
Date and Time of FIR (प्र. ख. दिनांक आणि वेळ): 01/04/2026 02:00 वाजता
2. S.No. (क्र.सं.): Acts (अधिनियम) Sections (कलम)

First Information Report No. 0038/2026
P.S. Gondia (Railway), Nagpur Railway Police District · 1 April 2026 · Published by Nagpur Railway Police · Reproduction
Filed at a railway police station in Maharashtra. A traveller fell asleep on a bench opposite the booking office at Gondia station; when he woke, his phone was gone from his trouser pocket, and so was his purse with his ID cards and ₹1,500. Accused: 'unknown'. Section: BNS 303(2), theft. Every later case in this section is checked against the same three lines: owner, loss, law.

OWNER ✓ · LOSS ✓ · LAW ✓ → Thief: obvious
The full six-page FIR, with an English translation of the complaint, is on the desk below.

PAGE 3 · ITEM 9: PROPERTY STOLEN

Particulars of properties of interest (संबंधित मालमत्तेचा तपशील).

S. No. (क्र.सं.)	Property Category (मालमत्ता प्रवर्ग)	Property Type (मालमत्ता प्रकार)	Description (विवरण)	Value in Rs (रु. मध्ये)
1	इलेक्ट्रॉनिक्स आणि दूरसंचार उपकरण	मोबाईल फोन	एक पिवळसरी करड्या मोबाईल रंगाचा डिजी फोन, IMEI क्र. 424274403 आणि एक हे. क्र. असलेले, 865873074257335 किंमत 17000/-	17,000.00
2	सरकारने अशी सूचना घोषित केली	रोख रक्कम		.00
3	सरकारने अशी सूचना घोषित केली	मुद्रांक/आयकर कार्ड		.00
4	सरकारने अशी सूचना घोषित केली	एटीएम कार्ड		.00
5	सरकारने अशी सूचना घोषित केली	पासबुक		.00
6	लागू असेल तसाल	अन्यविध- रुपया	1500 रुपये	1,500.00
10.	Total value of property (In Rs) (मालमत्तेची एकूण मूल्य (रु. मध्ये)) :			18,500.00

Mobile phone ₹17,000 · PAN card · Aadhaar card · ATM card · licence · cash ₹1,500 · total ₹18,500

'Kleptomania', The Journal of Mental Science
July 1902 · Vol. 9, pp. 202–275 · British psychiatric journal · Reproduction of page 202
The article opens with 'the injudicious defence of two lady thieves' on the plea of kleptomania. Writing like this gave families and courts a medical account of shoplifting to set against a criminal one. The full article is on the desk.

Scan: Wellcome Library / Internet Archive (public domain).

TWO TRIALS AT THE OLD BAILEY
1885 · WHITELEY'S, WESTBOURNE GROVE

SAL. GEORGINA LOUISA RYAN, Stealing 1½ yards of ribbon, the property of William Whiteley.
Mr. Oakley Prosecuted; Messrs Edward Clarke, Q.C., and Besley Defended.
Margaret Wellspoon. I am employed by Mr. Whiteley—on 11th July a sale commenced in several departments—I was engaged in the ribbon department with a great many others—I know the prisoner as a casual customer in my department for about 18 months—on 11th July she came to my counter and took up a piece of ribbon value 2½d.—each piece is ticketed with the length and the price—I think she gave me a shilling in payment—I wrapped it in paper—we always put the amount we receive on the bottom of the bill, which is in duplicate, and give it to a cash boy, who takes it to the cashier, and then brings the change back to me with the stamped bill, and we then give it to the customer—I did that with reference to Mrs. Ryan on that occasion—while the cash boy was going to the desk I noticed the prisoner rolling some pieces of ribbon very tight in her hand, and when the boy came back with the change she dropped them in the box from which she had taken them—I was
* 'Richerches nouvelles sur les maladies de l'esprit.'

Crime-Assistant. I have heard that Whiteley's men called regularly at her house.
John Walter Jude. I am dissecting clerk at Whiteley's, I analyse the bills—I produce all the bills for all sales from the two desks in the ribbon department—there is no bill for the sale of a piece of ribbon at 1s. 11½d. on 22nd July.
Cross-examined. Miss Paine would pay into desk 53—the 503 on the bill is the number of the assistant—I cannot tell you the number of the bills in each of those bundles—I do not think the assistants sometimes put the goods of different customers on the same bill.
The prisoner received an excellent character. Not Guilty.

1895 · DE SELINCOURT'S SILK WAREHOUSE

NEW COURT.—Wednesday, May 22nd, 1895.
Before Mr. Recorder.
454. HANNAH WILSON (40) and ANN HANSTEAD (40), Stealing eighty-six yards of silk, the property of Charles De Selincourt.
Mr. Symons Prosecuted, and Mr. Percell Defended.
Henry Groves. I am warehouseman to De Selincourt and Son, of Wood Street—on May 8th the prisoners came in together; [illegible] stuck to her dress—I tried to keep it there—Wilson said she was a respectable woman, of Hackney.
Guilty.—They then took Pleaded Guilty to a previous conviction of a like nature in the name of Ward and Sadler at this Court on June 27th, 1887.—Three Years' Penal Servitude, having still a portion of their former sentence to serve.

Proceedings of the Central Criminal Court, London

Robin Hood and the Monk
About 1450 · Ballad, stanzas 48–52 · Original: Cambridge University Library MS Ff.5.48 · Text as printed by F. J. Child, 1884
The oldest surviving Robin Hood ballad, and an openly violent one: Little John beheads the monk who betrayed Robin, and Much kills the monk's young page 'for feed lest he wolde tell'.

A Gest of Robyn Hode
Printed in Edinburgh by Chepman & Myllar, c.1508 · Opening page · Reproduction, original in the National Library of Scotland
The longest early ballad: 'Lythe and listin, gentlimen…'. Robin helps a poor knight with a loan, but never robs the rich to give to the poor.

John Stow, The Annales of England
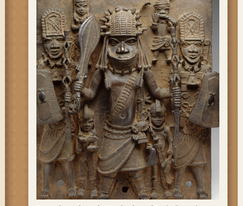
London, 1592 · Page 227 · Reproduction from the Early English Books scan
'…poore mans goodes hee spared, abundantlie releeuing them with that, which by theefte hee gote from Abbeyes and the houses of riche Carles.' The best-known part of the story is the latest addition.

Robin Hood on screen
1922 and 1938 · Film posters · Reproductions
Posters for the Douglas Fairbanks (1922) and Errol Flynn (1938) films. In both, Robin is a wronged nobleman fighting injustice rather than an outlaw robbing travellers at knifepoint.

Posters: United Artists (1922); Warner Bros. (1938). Public domain; via Wikimedia Commons.



Brass plaque from the royal palace of Benin (image)
Edo peoples, c.1540–70 · Enlarged image · Original: The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (1990.192)
Cast by Benin's royal guild of brass casters and fixed to the palace's pillars, plaques like this recorded kings, warriors and court ceremonies. They were the palace's archive, not decoration.

Image: The Met, Plaque with Warrior and Attendants, 1990.332, Gift of Mr. and Mrs. Klaus G. Perls, 1990. Open Access (CC0).

From Benin City to the world
1897 · Taken from ① Benin City to ② London, where many were auctioned
After 1897 · Sold on to collections in Europe and North America, among them ③ the Met and ④ the Smithsonian
2022 · The Smithsonian transfers ownership of 29 objects back to Nigeria

From Benin City to the world (map)
Map: Hermann Berghaus, Chart of the World on Mercator's Projection, Gotha: Justus Perthes, 1897 · Detail
A world map printed in the year of the raid, with the objects' journeys drawn on for this exhibition. Objects taken from Benin City were auctioned in London and passed to collections across Europe and North America. More than a century later, most of them are still outside Nigeria.

Map: public domain, via Wikimedia Commons (from Barry Lawrence Ruderman Antique Maps).